CORRESPONDENCE AND DISCUSSION ITEMS

1. Correspondence from Jorge Cervantes:
    - What types of point-of-care or diagnostic ultrasound studies may be performed in a clinical setting without direct supervision from a radiologist when conducted by appropriately certified healthcare professionals, including licensed physicians, nurse practitioners, physician assistants, or certified sonographers?
      Response: The Board Rules do not distinguish between types of point-of-care or diagnostic ultrasound studies when determining supervision requirements. Instead, the required level of supervision depends on the practitioner type and their protocol agreement or job description.
      APRNs may order diagnostic studies and imaging only under a protocol agreement, which must specify the types of studies and imaging tests they may order. Any study ordered must fall within that agreement's scope. If an APRN is authorized to order an X-ray, ultrasound, or other imaging test, the agreement must require that a physician trained in that area read and interpret the results, and that physician must be readily available to the APRN.
      PAs may order or initiate diagnostic studies in any healthcare setting as authorized by their supervising physician. Under Rule 360-5-.04, job descriptions need not list every activity a PA is qualified to perform but must confine PA activities to the supervising physician's scope of practice. Under O.C.G.A. § 43-34-103, PAs need not be physically present with their supervising physician to provide certain services, however, the supervising physician remains responsible for the PA's performance and must be immediately available by telecommunications.
      Radiologist assistants require direct, on-site radiologist supervision for advanced diagnostic imaging under Georgia statute and Board rule.
      The Board does not license or regulate sonographs and therefore cannot make a determination of their scope of practice.
2. Correspondence from Senator Kay Kirkpatrick:
    - Under Georgia law and Board rules, may a physician or other authorized practitioner prescribe multiple prescription medications in advance as part of an emergency or travel medical kit for conditions that the patient may develop in the future? If so, what requirements regarding the practitioner-patient relationship, assessment or examination, diagnosis, telemedicine, prescribing, and follow-up must be satisfied?

Response: Based solely on the materials provided, the company represents that a medical provider reviews the individual's medical history before issuing the prescriptions and may require additional telephone or virtual consultation. It also represents that the medications are prescribed to a specific individual and are not intended to be shared. However, the materials do not establish whether that process satisfies Georgia law or GCMB rules, nor do they establish whether the practitioners prescribing these kits to Georgia patients are Georgia-licensed practitioners or what clinical evaluation occurs in each case.
The fact that prescription medications are packaged or marketed together as an "emergency medical kit" does not, by itself, determine whether the prescribing is permissible. The Board is further exploring whether these companies' prescribing practitioners comply with Georgia requirements applicable to the practitioner-patient relationship and prescribing. The site and the correspondence received did not identify a specific Georgia physician, and the Board was unable to determine whether a specific physician violated Georgia law and Board rules. However, the Board understands the public concern, and in response, has established a working committee to explore plausible action, within the Board's jurisdiction, to ensure that similar companies and practices involving Georgia-licensed physicians comply with Georgia laws and regulations.
